

The clear impact of the removal of regulations limiting the number of media outlets which can be owned by an individual/entity has been a marked increase in the concentration of media ownership in fewer hands. I believe that the indicated increased concentration is detrimental both to competition and to the likely recognition of divergent viewpoints.

Americans have traditionally looked with disfavor upon countries who control the content of their media, but is the situation much different when a few oligarchs exercise such control of content - - I think not.
